

Fine living ON A FARM

A HOME THAT RESPECTS THE ENVIRONMENT AND CELEBRATES THE SCENERY

“There is a strong Free State farmhouse influence that can be seen in the design of this gorgeous property.”

Situated on a working farm, this home has been designed to take in the gorgeous views of the estate. Having consulted architects from Bloemfontein, there is a strong Free State farmhouse influence that can be seen in the design of this gorgeous property.

“We just loved the concept of the silo clad in rusted steel, which is our food pantry,” says the owner, adding that this feature “really makes a statement when you arrive at the house”.

The home has been designed to cater for open and easy living and according to the owner, it feels cosy enough for the family of four, yet it can handle a large family gathering effortlessly.

The dining room is considered as a favourite space for this family and it is here where they can relax and enjoy a meal at the modern wooden table with complementary chairs, while taking in the views of the hills.

Using a classic colour palette throughout, the interior of the home shows off attractive rooms that will not date in the near future. And with the inclusion of an abundance of glass windows and doors, the scenic >

The kitchen featured in this home has a combination of imported high-gloss acrylic features and matte-satin paint, in line with current worldwide trends. Earthy neutral colours were used to blend with the natural surroundings of this estate.

RIGHT: Decor Identity worked closely with these owners to create a home that is modern, minimalistic and child-friendly. The company assisted with the selection and designing of hard finishes, bathroom finishes and the kitchen, as well as choosing the soft furnishings, customising furniture and fabric, and accessorising and completing each room with styling and décor elements.

views surrounding the property can be enjoyed from pretty much anywhere in the home. "We wanted the interior to mimic the tranquillity of the farm," explains the owner, and this has been achieved in a trendy and timeless way.

Describing the interior style of the home as bold and modern, the owner explains that it was designed to be comfortable yet stylish – a family home with beautiful pieces of furniture that were selected to make a statement in the larger rooms.

The homes throughout this working farm, which even has a herd of Nguni cattle, are all designed to be single-storey properties. In so doing, all the residents within the estate are afforded the opportunity to take full advantage of the breathtaking views with houses that are designed architecturally to respect the environment. Here residents live in harmony with nature while enjoying a lifestyle that epitomises easy and relaxed living. 🏡
