Office design is in an exciting space, with a strong movement to staff-friendly environments that not only reflect the company's ethos, but are highly functional and aesthetically pleasing too.

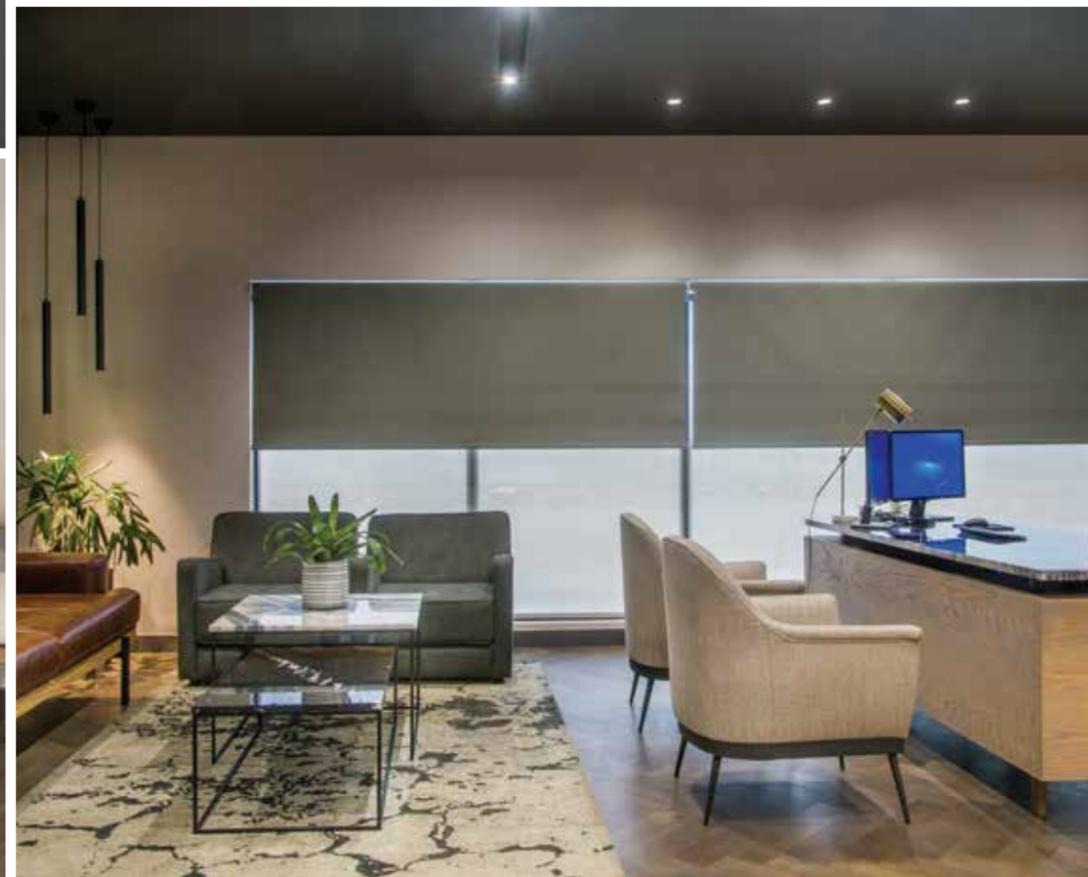

This newly built office is no different. The architecture brief required the design to be "practical and simple yet effective in nature", says the interior designer. "I believe the client wanted to achieve that organic natural rustic feel, same as what was needed for the interior space. So overall the exterior and interior complements the nature of the business 100%," she adds.

With a light feel about the space, the interior is what makes this office such a success. "The inspiration behind the interiors as mentioned above was inspired by the nature of the business, which is a trucking company. It needed to be masculine, rustic yet functional for everyone. The interior spaces were kept open and modern, avoiding clutter. The colour palette was also inspired by the exterior, and the company branding. The overall palette was kept neutral with lots of earthy tones and masculine browns, > black and dark wood tones. It was essentially softened by the light brown tones and touches of green everywhere," says the interior designer.

To achieve an effective office design, she recommends these tips: "Make it a homely space for everyone working there. An office doesn't have to be a space that is cold and uninviting, it can be accessorised so that it feels comfortable for the people who work there. Think out of the box and be brave with your decision taking; really invest time in each and every design element. Here we have really gone all out to design each room, from the tiles in the bathrooms to the kitchen spaces and the ceilings. Plus each and every item in this office has been customised with great attention to detail." 🏡
